The US Air Force Security Service believes that recently intercepted enemy messages indicating a build-up of air facilities and personnel in the Sariwon area of North Korea (30 miles south of Pyongyang) foreshadow an intensification of enemy air activity in the "near future." It is believed that the impending "activity" probably will involve jet fighter, ground attack and bomber units.

The Far East Command considers that enemy night attacks on Suwon airfield (20 miles south of Seoul) on 14 and 17 June by single planes indicate that enemy air forces may soon begin an attack against UN air installations near the front lines.
